

Assistants in nursing

It is the policy of the Australian Nursing & Midwifery Federation that:

1. Assistants in nursing should be regulated under the Health Practitioner Regulation National Law Act 2009 (National Law).
2. Assistants in nursing must be referred to by common nomenclature. The most appropriate title for this class of worker is assistant in nursing (AIN) and should be the nationally protected title recognised under the National Law.
3. Regulation would afford assistants in nursing a recognised Professional Practice Framework, incorporating national codes, guidelines and standards, and a scope of practice.
4. Nationally accredited education and training for assistants in nursing must be provided to ensure the safety and dignity of individuals receiving care and to enable assistants in nursing to practice safely and competently.
5. The educational preparation of assistants in nursing should be in accordance with nationally recognised education from industry agreed training packages which meet the standards required for work in the health and community services sectors. There should be a minimum level of education mandated nationally, at Certificate III level, to ensure consistent educational preparation.
6. Until such time as assistants in nursing are regulated, they must be guided by the National Code of Conduct for Unregulated Workers. The Code sets out the minimum standards required for health workers who are not currently registered under the national registration and accreditation scheme.
7. All education for health and community services workers including assistants in nursing should recognise prior learning and experience and should be provided within the Vocational Education and Training (VET) sector by a Registered Training Organisation or a Technical and Further Education (TAFE) Institute with the required qualification on their scope of registration.
8. Any requirement for student clinical placement of assistants in nursing during their education and training should only be conducted in settings which are commensurate with their level of skill and knowledge.
9. Assistants in nursing work under the direction and supervision of registered nurses and enrolled nurses. They provide delegated elements of care to patients and/or residents according to the nursing care plan. Consequently, this level of worker must be supervised and assessed by a registered nurse during their period of clinical training and thereafter.
10. Formal articulation and recognition of prior learning arrangements should be developed and implemented between VET Certificate III and Certificate IV courses for assistants in nursing and the Diploma of Nursing qualification that lead to registration as an enrolled nurse.
11. Assistants in nursing should have equitable access to continuing educational opportunities and study leave provisions.
